

Betta, E., galfano, g., & Turatto, M. (2007). Microsaccadic response during inhibition of return in a target-target paradigm. Vision Research, 47, 428-436.

Gooding, D. C., & Tallent, K. A. (2001). The association between antisaccade task and working memory task performance in schizophrenia and bipolar disorder. The Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease, 189, 8-16.

Rotman, G., Brenner, E., & Smeets, J. B. (2005). Flashes are localized as if they were moving with the eyes. Vision Research, 45, 355-364.

Valsecchi, M., & Turatto, M. (2007). Microsaccadic response to visual events that are invisible to the superior colliculus. Behavioral Neuroscience, 121, 786-793.

Wang, Z., & Dell’Osso, L. F. (2007). Being “slow to see” is a dynamic visual function consequence of infantile nystagmus syndrome: Model predictions and patient data identify stimulus timing as its cause. Vision Research, 47, 1550-1560.

